Summer Course on Gender & Development

A N Sinha Institute of Social Studies (ANSISS), Patna and Sakshamaa, an initiative of Centre for Catalyzing Change (C3), are organizing a 6-day summer-course on Gender & Development. The overall objective of the course is to raise awareness and capacities for gender analysis, measurement and integration of gender into the development discourse. The course is designed to expose students to the discourse of engendering development, a development paradigm that emerged as a visible need after the World Conference on Women in 1975 and overtime has become a significant element of public discourse and policy.

Course Objective

The course offers some useful tools for examining the nexus of gender and development in the local, national as well as global context. It aims at equipping participants with tools and frameworks of gender analysis, essential for the formulation of gender sensitive policies and project and thereby enhancing economic opportunities for women and LGBTQs. The course intends to facilitate participants in understanding the need for engendering development and also the significance of working for bridging gender gap.

Course Contents

Understanding critical dimensions of women and other genders' economic empowerment would be an important focus of the course. The participants would be exposed to concepts like multiple burden of unpaid work (domestic and care work) and time poverty for women; debate around measurement of women's work; gender gap in workforce participation; shrinking economic opportunities and its implication on women etc. The course will also cover the core issues of Gender and Development including health, migration, political participation, integrating gender in research methodology, significance of gender disaggregated data etc.

Potential participants: This six-day course is designed mainly for researchers, primarily PhD and MPhil students; academics; and development professionals.

Resource persons: Experts from international/national/local institutions will take lectures

Travel Grant: Three-tier A/C fare (except Rajdhani) will be provided to the selected participants along with local hospitality. There is no registration fee to attend the course.

Mode of Summer Course: The summer course will be held in off-line mode.
